Joint Program
Puget Sound Section, ACS
University of Washington Sigma Xi
January 22, 2003

by Arden Forrey

This joint program will be held at the Center for Urban Horticulture from 6:30 pm till 9:30 pm Wednesday evening. The primary speaker will be Professor Carol G.. Thomas of the University of Washington History Department followed by Linda Roundhill, Ancient Artifact Conservator. Professor Thomas will speak on the topic "Modern Science in the Service of the Ancient Past" followed by Linda Roundhill on "Chemical Science and the Conservation of Ancient Objects" The meeting will begin at 6:30 pm with buffet refreshments followed by the program at 7:30 pm. All undergraduate and graduate students at all area colleges and universities are invited, since the intent is to depict the humanities and sciences as a common effort in the liberal arts.

Professor Thomas is joint author with Craig Conant of the recent book "Citadel to City State: The Transformation of Ancient Greece 1200-700 BCE" and this topic will be one case study that links history with the chemical science in the service of ancient conservation topic, which Linda Roundhill will amplify in the second presentation.

Professor Thomas is Professor of Ancient Greek History at the University of Washington and is two-time President of the Association of Ancient Historians. She has also written: "Decoding Ancient History: A Toolkit for the Historian as Detective" (with D. Wick); "Myth Becomes History: Progress into the Past (with W.A.McDonald), and "Paths from Ancient Greece".

Linda Roundhill received a BA (Cum Laude) from the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, and a BA (Honors), from University College, London UK Institute of Archeology. She was awarded the Ione Gedye Prize for Practical Work for her work: "Archeologic Conservation and Materials Science". Presently she is a private conservator in the Puget Sound Area.
